CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE WORKS FINE

Windsor III

Annie Laurie Hearin came up missing July 26, 1988. State and federal law enforcement agencies launched a massive nationwide missing persons investigation. The press reported that her husband Robert Hearin was one of the wealthiest men in Mississippi. The federal grand jury indicted Newton Alfred Winn, a Florida attorney, for conspiracy to kidnap Mrs. Hearin, and related charges. Press coverage of the proceedings surrounding the investigation and prosecution stretched across the country, from the New York Times to the Los Angeles Times. At trial, the prosecution presented a complex assortment of facts and circumstances, for which the judge instructed the jury that “[t]he law makes no distinction between the weight to be given either direct or circumstantial evidence”. The jury convicted Winn of all charges and he was sentenced to federal prison. Annie Laurie Hearin was never found. . .

ANTI-CONTRACTING AND THE LEGISLATIVE PROCESS: SEVEN THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

Windsor III

Fostering continued growth and protecting our State Association through the legislative process may at times feel like navigating through a mine field. From the initial drafting of a bill to its final passage into law, what are some of the do's and don'ts and pitfalls in between? As a long-standing member of the Mississippi House of Representatives with over a decade of legal experience, Representative Bryant Clark, will serve as a guide to assist in navigating the legislative process to success.
